FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

MONDAY, April 8-6 P. M. The tendency towards improvement on the Stock Ex change has been checked to day by the telegrams from announcing a rather heavy decline in American her securities, both in England and on the Contineat, in consequence of a threatened rupture between Prance and Prussa. Although the actual outbreak of bestillies in the Old World would tend to improve the carrying and export trade of this and indirectly to advance the market value of railway securities, the bears on the Stock Exrange made use of the intelligence as an argument in wor of a further decline; and their expectations were not disappointed, notwithstanling that money was geneilly reported in better supply than at any time last cek. The rate for call loans was strictly seven per cent, even on government securities, and good bouses were freely accommodated; but it was noticeable the wants of highly speculative firms others in inferior credit were not wilmet in all cases, even by those banks which enemployed, owing to the very conservative feeling which just now prevails among them. Di best grade of commercial paper passes at 7 a 8 per cent, other signatures being out of favor at the banks.

sta ement of the associated banks for the reflects the condition of the money market the past week, in which there was a considerable into the Sub-Treasury, caused by Treasury drafts ipts in payment for seven-thirty notes bought up for $102,355,347 accordingly. The deposits, chiefly those of country banks, show the unusually large decrease of $4,618,981, and the legal tender notes of $3.438.036. The loans have at the same time de latter would have been greater but for the sales of coin by the government. The circulation shows an increase of $105,378. The totals of the present and previous

MUSICAL INSCRUMENTS, BRASS, GERMAN SILVER AND OTHER METALS.

This company, incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, is now engaged in manufacturing wind instruments in brass, german silver and other metals, auperior to all others.

The improvements by which their qualities of excellence was at last been obtained result from the skill, experience, have at last been obtained result from the skill, experience, have at last been obtained result from the skill, experience, in laws been secured by letters patent, granted in the United States and in Europe, to Mr. Schreiber, and by him assigned.

These improvements relate to the FORM, the ACTION.

My DEAR SIR—You have marked an era in the history of the orchestra by your inventions for the improvement of My Dean Sin.—You have marked an era internment of brass instruments.

It regard the water valve, the circular form, and manner of sustaining the weight of the instrument, as improvements, each of very great value. But I am particularly pleased with your plan for a uniform upward direction for all the bella. Who would dream sesting aside any question of convenience of arrangement—of constructing as organ in such a manner that the pipes should open downward and emit their sounds within a foot or two of the floor, or of making some of them open toward the front, some toward the back. and some toward the root, some toward the sades? Yet perfect union on the bander or orchestra as in the and appeared direction and appeared the sades when the secondary is a supportant of the property of the part of the pa

DRAS Six.—I write to express my pleasure at the remarkable success of your long continued studies and efforts to improve the success of your long continued attailes and efforts to improve the success of the success o harmonious and the tone super or to any yet produced; the manner of supporting the weight as as to leave the hands unburdened and consequent free spom the manput to its instrument of supporting free spom the manput to the instrument of water, and the direction of the bell upbround free of water, and the direction of the bell upbround free of water, and the direction of the bell up at leave the super of buds and orchestras. As formed by the old and usual method of construction, in addition to the disastrantage of having the different voices turned in different directions, so to speak, by the direction and position of the hells, the sound is subjected to other and quite as great disadvantages. Some material substance is almost invariably before the bell of the instrument when in the hands of the orchestral performer—either the front part of the stage, a seat, the back of a brother performer, a music sixed, or another instrument, thus not only obstructing the emission of sound, and making it impossible to effect a perfect ensemble, but very surrounly affecting the quality of tone and the pitch of the instruments. All this is avoided by the simple and edgant device of turning the bell of the instruments, as you have done.

I wish I were authory of have done.

I wish I were authory sound to the neare of all instruments, bester upon accounting this quality of the surprise of the surrounding the surface of th monious and perfect vibration, and an excellence of quality, exactness of pitch and pority of tone never possible in the more or less angular form heratofore used.

By directing the bell upward you have made possible an entire unity of sound, a most desirable result, in strictaness, unattanable with instruments made in the ordinary manuer, of which the bells emit sounds in various directions according to their position.

By causing the weight of the instrument to rest on the shoulder, you have given the performer the most absolute control of it.

shoulder, you have given the personnel of the state of the state valve you have removed a most annoying obstruction in the way of every performer.

On the whole you have produced by far the most perfect instrument yet made, and I heartily compraisints you and the profession on your envisable success. Faithfully yours, the profession on your envisable success. Faithfully yours, the profession on your envisable success.

great annorance caused by the will not rail to appropriate while playing, they will not rail to appropriate this invention.

I may also add that the tone is much improved, not only in power, but in westness.

Hoping that every success will attend efforts so richly deserving of it, I remain yours truly.
